WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1877 THE article on our fourth page, parrating some incidents concerning the "blue glass cure," will prove interesting, even if the statements be exagerated. Had it been signed by some reliable name, it might be considered more credible. However, there may be some-No. 2. W. Ewine has been this day appointed an Agent thing in it, and those who have the opportunity to test its merits, may find some virtue in it. Why may not the same principles be applied successfully to animal life?

In this way only can the extent and value of the public lands be ascertained. If the same system could be applied to the Crown Lands, it would produce the same results, and increase their revenue.

THE valuable Sugar Estate on Mani, known as the Waikapu Plantation, changed hands last week, and will hereafter be conducted by a company, consisting of Henry Cornwell, W. H. Cornwell, and Geo. W. Macfarlane, at a valuation understood to be between $150,000 and $175,000. It comprises about 10,000 acres of land, including half of the Waikapu Common, which, with irrigation, can be made very productive. This estate has cost some fifteen years labor of the senior partner, who has brought it to be one of the most profitable in the group, at an outlay of over $300,000 for permanent improvements, land purchases, water rights, etc. The present growing crop, all of which is to come off during the next twenty months, is estimated at 1,400 tons of sugar, worth not far from $200,000, at present rates, while the expenses for this period will not exceed one half that sum. We congratulate the new firm, and wish them all the success which their enterprise deserves.

Ir may be of interest to note at the present time the periodicity of the eruptions on Hawaii. Commencing with the first of which there is any definite tradition, which occurred in 1789, from the Kilassa crater, at which time a company of warriors passing through Puna, on their way to fight Kamehameha, were smothered by the hot and paisonou vapors and clouds of falling sand, there have been during this period of eighty-eight years, ten great eruptions, not including the present one, showing an average of about one every nine years. The second one was from the now extinct volcano of Hualalai, at the beginning of the present century, being the offly eruption from that mountain of which there is any record or tradition. It was of extreme Purchase land at Kekala, in Puna, Hawall, by J. w. violence, and produced a marked change in the coast line by the immense volume of lava Lease Summer Parker, land lying between Kaohe and which it poured into the sca. The third took place in 1823 from Kilanea, flooding a large tract of fertile land in Kau, the lava stream being over five miles in width where it enthe Harmakun, adjoining his land, by Char. The fifth eruption was from Kilauea, in 1810, at which time a river of lava flowed into the sea a short distance south of the village of Hilo. It lasted for two weeks. In 1843, the sixth in the series took place from the summit of Mauna Loa, and continued for four weeks, two streams of lava flowing from a lateral crater on the north side of the mountain toward Kona and Mauna Kea. The next eruption occurred in the year 1852, the lava breaking out of the side of Mauna Loa, and flowing directly toward Hilo.

The eruption of 1855 was one of the most remarkable, commencing in the summit crater of Mauna Loz, and sending forth for thirteen months a constant river of lava, which flowed to within six miles of Hilo. The eruption of 1859 was probably the most extensive and magnificent on record. It commenced from a new crater on the northern slope of Mauna Loa, and flowed for a distance of forty miles, entering the sea near Kawaihae Bay. It lasted about four months. The tenth eruption was that of 1868, nine years ago, and was remarkable for the number and extreme violence of the earthquake shocks which accompanied it. These, as well as the famous mudflow and the lava flows in Kau, are fresh in the memory of all.

The gist of the proposed agreement between the two houses of Congress in respect to the exercise of powers claimed to be delegated to warrant in that instrument for the creation of such a commission or the delegation of power assumed to be possessed by Congress itself. If the commission were merely to report an opinion on the subject, the case would be different. This, however, is not the fact, since its opinion is to stand as the law of the case, unless both houses reject it. Neither house, not knowing what the decision is to be, would for a moment pledge itself to accept it if it were not understood beforehand that neither ouse alone can reject it without being guilty of bad faith. The two houses simply bind themselves by mutual agreement, each boping to win and each taking the chance of losing. The best thing that can be said for the plan onsists in the fact that it is a temporary and extraordinary expedient to get Congress and the country out of a tight and possibly a dangerous place, rendered necessary not by any essential difficulty in the problem to be solved, but by the conflict of opinion between the two Houses of Congress and among the people as to the result of the last Presidential election. This is the whole and only argument for the measure. It is, in itself considered, a strong argument. We feel its force, and presume that with the majority of the people it will be sufficient. But for what seems to be the necessity of the situation, neither house of Congress and neither political party would for a moment accept the measure. The acceptance is simply a choice of evils, and if the evil chosen were to become a precedent to furnish a temptation to similar complications in the future, and
